Superior Ore Vessel Lost

November Curse Hits Again

Great Lakes sailors call it the curse of the 11th month.

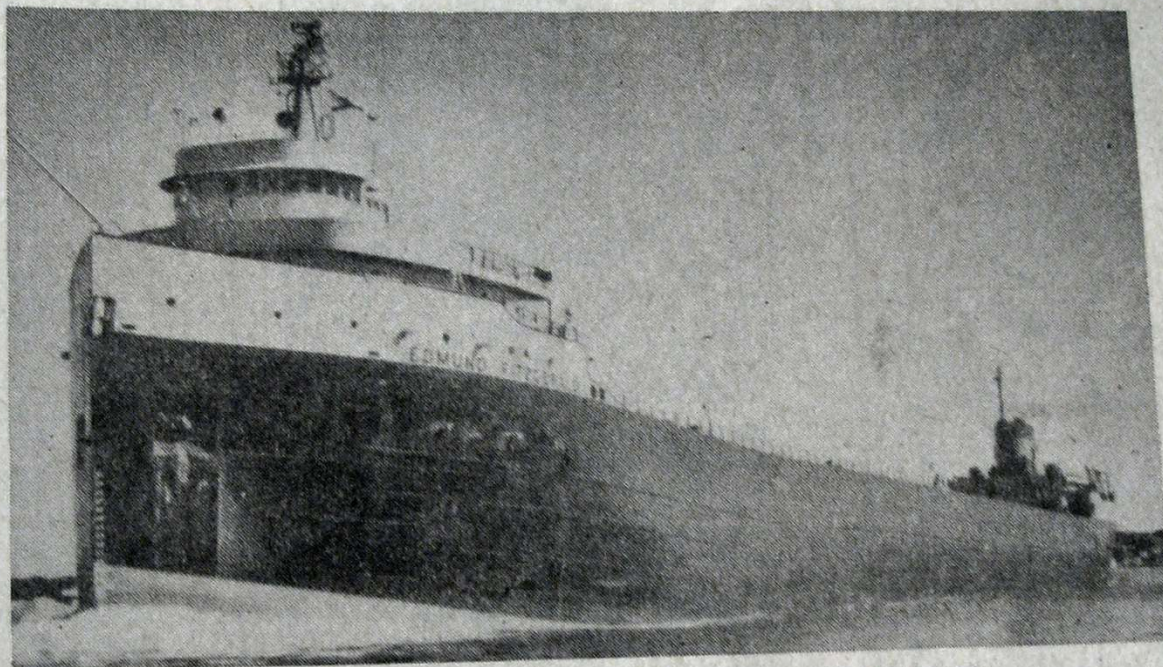

In some parts of Chicago it's referred to as the "big hawk."

Weathermen call it hurricane-force winds.

Whatever its handle, it most generally seems to cut loose in November and has done some pretty serious rampaging.

As the Coast Guard searched Lake Superior for the ship Edmund Fitzgerald, sunk with a known crew of 29 during a wind storm today, other Coast Guard officials helped look for the bodies of two Grand Rapids youths in Lake Michigan at Grand Haven.

Winds exceeded 60 miles per hour

29 Men Missing In Lake

*Wreckage Found,
But No Survivors*

SAULT STE. MARIE (UPI) — The 29-year old ore carrier Edmund Fitzgerald, once called the monarch of the Great Lakes, sank Monday night during hurricane-force winds and 25-foot-high waves on Lake Superior.

A Coast Guard officer said he feared all 28 crewmen, plus a civilian seaman, were lost.

Ships and planes that spent the night and early today seeking the 17-year-old "Fitz" turned instead to the grim task of looking for bodies.

"She went down, I think within 10 minutes," said a Coast Guard spokesman.
